He's Special

When he took over as director of the Central Intelligence Agency, then-Admiral Stansfield Turner said that except in "special cases" his agency would refuse to hire any "double-dippers," government employees who draw both a paycheck and a pension from the government.

Guess who just retired from the Navy and has begun drawing a $23,000 pension to go along with his $57,500 salary? And who has thus become the biggest "double dipper" in the whole U.S. government?

Right. Stansfield Turner.

A very special case.
